Stick To His Last

THERE MAY SOMETHING be a good reason for a successful man to branch out into a new activity and hope to succeed, but as a general proposition it is wise for the "shoemaker to stick to his last."

And by this we mean that a teacher ought to stick to his teaching, a preacher to his ministry, an editor to his newspaper (and as far as possible, to the truth)—and leave the pecking to those who are not otherwise more usefully employed. Few men are capacitated to pursue satisfactorily diverging activities. And especially is there an obligation upon the man given a position of trust, to adhere to that trust to the extent of his capacity.

What we have in mind at the present moment is that with reference to the recently published statement that a trusted member of the faculty of Emory College, in a position which he has held (and perhaps with dignity and efficiency) for almost a quarter of a century, is being talked of as a possible candidate for the governorship of Georgia on a Republican ticket.

We hope he will not thus jeopardize his capacity for usefulness in a position so important, and bring upon the institutions which he has served so long the evidence of a misfit. In some sections (those where interests and sentiments are different), Republican candidacies are recognized as a natural by-product to a call to service. In Georgia, where the element of thought and action, a Republican candidate breaks himself loose from the masses with whom he is calculated to serve, and wherein are the best opportunities for service. There is little value in a man setting himself at odds with the people upon the assumption that he owes any such sacrifice to himself or to them.

This man, who is dean at Emory University, can better serve his state, and thus better serve himself, by dismissing the thought of dragging Emory University into a state of discredit and possible disruption.

Birth—Death!

ON THE CALENDAR of life, these are the two outstanding events—the beginning and the ending.

All the other worthwhile incidents are those which fall in between, some of which events, to be sure, are even more important than the beginning and ending.

Last week for a few moments we sat in the office of one of our most important county branches of service. A man came in with two papers to be recorded, and for which he expected pay. These papers were the records of births and deaths. It costs very little to get these dignified bits of paper—merely a few cents for each individual. But while the transaction was going on, another man came in with a larger bill. He had been doing some important work at the county hospital under a contract which had stipulated that any upward fluctuation in price of material would justify an increase in the final charges for the work being done. He spent sometime showing why the bill was increased.

The hospital, you understand, is the county-owned institution which is used by the kindly physicians as a clearing-house for their business. They take people into the world there, and dismiss them there. (This word clearing-house easily means they are supposed to make something clear on each transaction.) The doctors require an x-ray machine to make pictures of the internal machinery of those they take in and turn out, and they will not tolerate an interference in the making of the pictures, lest it give a false representation of the secrets hidden inside. So the bill had something to do with the additional expense of changes made in the installation of the electrical system of the hospital. (If a doctor can't see what's inside of a man, he can't know how much to charge, can he?) So the matter was finally figured out.

and a check issued in payment of the electrical installation.

On the street we met the undertaker and he was smiling—there was a notice in the postoffice which said the funeral will be at 3:30 o'clock. His smile was half as broad as the doctors'—he only comes into the transaction once, and the taxpayers don't provide him with a place to do business, either.

Now Better Milk

WHAT WITH THE modern trend of females crowding the males out of the ordinary realms of commerce, if offers here occasionally to note that there are yet those on our side who not only hold their ground—but actually retaliate as occasion permits.

For instance, in the valued Morning News of a recent date there was a modest four-line item. "Ernest C. Bull, of Savannah, was selected vice-president of the Georgia Dairy Association at its annual meeting in Augusta yesterday."

And that is what we call retaliation. There may not be offered in this situation any promise of more and cheaper and better milk, but at least there ought to be some noise and earth-pawing. In our childhood at Grandmother Turner's cow lot we were impressed that the cows had all the preference as to feeding and fondling while the bulls (male members of the herd) were treated with silent scorn.

Today things have turned about, and we shall expect some pawing, and maybe a bellop occasionally from the leader of this Georgia herd!

Says National Guard Is Key To Defense

The National Guard program in Georgia and other states is viewed by Gen. Jacob L. Devers, commanding general of the army ground forces, as one of the keystones of the national defense structure. He said so in a strong statement at a press conference last week as he visited Fort McPherson on an inspection trip.

"Pointing out that the army ground forces are now short about 50,000 men, the AFG chief declared the army would need two years to prepare for another war, just as it did for World War II.

"The army doesn't want another war," he said, "but the army must be alert to such a possibility. We must shorten our time to get ready for another conflict to six months. To that end, we are trying to fill the ranks of the National Guard with key personnel around whom we can quickly build a powerful defensive structure."

The National Guard in Georgia is now the largest in the history of the state although it is still less than half of its full authorized post-war strength and that picture is roughly duplicated nationally.

COTTON GROWERS UNITE ON VARIETY

Bureau Members Believe Movement Will Contribute Toward Better Price

An effort to get every cotton grower in Bulloch county to plant the same variety in 1945 is being made by many of the local Farm Bureau chapters.

Opechee community took the lead with this project this year and gave an order for more than 500 bushels of Coker's 100 seed, a variety recommended for this area the Coastal Plains Experiment Station at Tifton and by Extension Service cotton specialists. Not all of these seed are to be bought directly from the breeder, but they will be certified seed.

grown in one-variety communities in North Georgia. The Warnock, Newkirk, Sibley, West Side and Portals chapters are taking active steps to get every acre of cotton planted in these communities on a one-variety basis. In these cases the 100 will be being pushed.

The Coker's 100 seed variety has proven good in all sections of the county during recent years. All three of the district winners in the five-acre contest last year used this variety. Several bushels of seed were bought co-operatively from the breeder, that is, all that the breeder would let the county have. Then 700 bushels were bought from the North Georgia communities.

Record Delegation at Democratic Meeting

For the first time in history, Georgia's entire congressional delegation—both senators and all ten congressmen—will attend the Democratic National convention in Philadelphia next July 12. All-in-all, Georgia, which will have twenty-eight votes this year to cast for presidential nominee, will also have 112 delegates at the convention. Each delegate will have one-fourth of a vote—a system favored by Acting Governor Thompson over a combination of voting delegates and non-voting alternates.

W. J. Harris, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, tendered his resignation to the President and the same time made his formal announcement as a candidate for United States senator to succeed Thos. W. Hardwick.

Survey is completed for paying Statesboro streets; citizens committee consists of S. P. Olliff, J. L. Coleman, R. Simmons, Brooks Simmons, A. J. Mossey, J. W. Williams, W. W. Smith and J. A. Brannen. Work expected to commence during coming spring.
